

Drew & Sunny Brown

Missionaries to Pakistan ♦ Project #42.10031

Ministry Focus

- The Browns’ ministry alongside the church in Pakistan has a focus of pastoral training and education, including teaching at George Theological College.
- Drew and Sunny have been asked to help church leaders develop a standardized Sunday school curriculum for use across the more than 260 congregations.
- Sunny will also nurture relationships and a ministry among women, and Drew will use his audio engineering background to help develop a radio ministry.

Drew grew up in the Boise area, and by the time he was in high school, his family was deeply embedded in the life and ministry of Cloverdale Church of God, where Drew began to explore a call to ministry. That led him to work with a local church plant and eventually to lead a new church plant. Drew is a trained church planter with a focus on missional church development, with ministry experience with youth, worship, young adults, church planting, and pastoring. But his journey through ministry took an abrupt turn when his wife was diagnosed with cancer and died. The father of two young children, Drew established a business as a professional audio engineer while continuing to work with different church denominations and groups helping with pulpit supply, worship support, and A/V training.

Sunny started life in New York, the daughter of multi-ethnic Hispanic parents who were nominally Catholic. At the age of 10, Sunny’s mother moved the family to Massachusetts, where Sunny was introduced to Christ through the influence of her best friend’s family and their invitation to a local Salvation Army congregation. In her early 20s, Sunny found herself moving across the country to Reno, Nevada. In time, she became deeply involved in the ministry of a local nondenominational church. In 2019, Sunny finished a master’s in human services and began working with refugee resettlement. Currently, she works with second language students in a middle school in Nampa, Idaho.

Nearly five years after the passing of Drew’s first wife, Drew and Sunny got married. As a family with their two children, they are striving to share God’s love and strength as living examples of enduring through life’s challenges with God’s help.

Visit the Browns’ online profile at www.chogglobal.org/DSBrown to learn more, to follow their ministry, or to become a financial partner.

Drew & Sunny Brown

Missionaries to Pakistan ♦ Project #42.10031

Ministry Focus

- The Browns’ ministry alongside the church in Pakistan has a focus of pastoral training and education, including teaching at George Theological College.
- Drew and Sunny have been asked to help church leaders develop a standardized Sunday school curriculum for use across the more than 260 congregations.
- Sunny will also nurture relationships and a ministry among women, and Drew will use his audio engineering background to help develop a radio ministry.

Drew grew up in the Boise area, and by the time he was in high school, his family was deeply embedded in the life and ministry of Cloverdale Church of God, where Drew began to explore a call to ministry. That led him to work with a local church plant and eventually to lead a new church plant. Drew is a trained church planter with a focus on missional church development, with ministry experience with youth, worship, young adults, church planting, and pastoring. But his journey through ministry took an abrupt turn when his wife was diagnosed with cancer and died. The father of two young children, Drew established a business as a professional audio engineer while continuing to work with different church denominations and groups helping with pulpit supply, worship support, and A/V training.

Sunny started life in New York, the daughter of multi-ethnic Hispanic parents who were nominally Catholic. At the age of 10, Sunny’s mother moved the family to Massachusetts, where Sunny was introduced to Christ through the influence of her best friend’s family and their invitation to a local Salvation Army congregation. In her early 20s, Sunny found herself moving across the country to Reno, Nevada. In time, she became deeply involved in the ministry of a local nondenominational church. In 2019, Sunny finished a master’s in human services and began working with refugee resettlement. Currently, she works with second language students in a middle school in Nampa, Idaho.

Nearly five years after the passing of Drew’s first wife, Drew and Sunny got married. As a family with their two children, they are striving to share God’s love and strength as living examples of enduring through life’s challenges with God’s help.

Visit the Browns’ online profile at www.chogglobal.org/DSBrown to learn more, to follow their ministry, or to become a financial partner.